

Mindset and Emotion Journal

A daily template for building emotional self-awareness — morning intention, an emotion tracking grid, and evening reflection. Seven daily pages follow, ready to use for a full week.

This journal is a tool for everyday self-awareness, not a clinical instrument or a substitute for professional support. If certain emotions show up as persistently overwhelming, or a pattern here feels bigger than day-to-day reflection can hold, that's worth bringing to a therapist or counselor alongside using this.

How to Use This Journal

- Morning: take 2-3 minutes before the day gets underway to set an intention, not to plan every detail
- Throughout the day: when a strong emotion shows up, jot it in the tracking grid in the moment, or catch up at a natural pause
- Evening: take 5-10 minutes to reflect honestly — this works best as observation, not self-judgment
- There's no need to fill in every single box every day — partial entries on a busy day are still worthwhile
